INTRODUCTION

The significance of effective communication has become widely recognized by all the actors managing EU funded programmes. In the 2021-2027 period the Bulgaria- North Macedonia CBC Programme will keep the good communication practices from the past and will apply a flexible approach in respond to the new challenges in public relations. The communication activities are designed to facilitate the programme implementation in two aspects: assisting candidates and beneficiaries and raising the awareness of the positive impact of the EU funding. The strategy will outline the global aims and specific objectives of the communication measures, target groups, communication channels, financial overview, information and publicity activities, monitoring and evaluation with output indicators.

In a European context of growing political disbelief, communication is regarded as more and more strategic and thus imbedded in the EU's common provisions regulation (CPR). Even though communication is not a core business task, it is probably the most important support and cross-cutting task to be carried out by the programmes. It is transversal beyond communication units, and so carried out across the Programme by a multitude of internal actors, multipliers, stakeholders and projects.

By taking stock of the previous period, the current strategy is built upon several layers of contributions: the lessons learnt from the previous programme, the new rules of publicity and information, the new branding approach of the European Commission, the joint Interreg approach for programme strategies and the knowledge of the audiences following the programme.

LESSONS LEARNT FROM 2014-2020

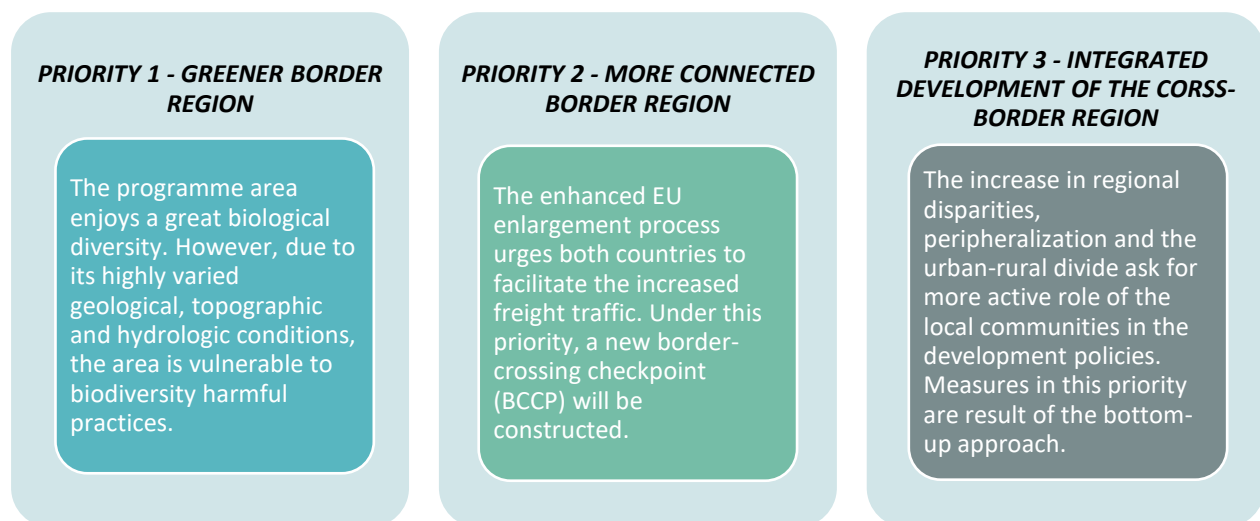

The period 2014-2020 made a decisive step forward acknowledging communication as a strategic function of the CBC programmes. The effectiveness of the communication for 2014-2020 demonstrated a high level of coherence between the envisaged activities and the objectives. The achievement of each general and specific objective was ensured by several communication measures. Potential beneficiaries were successfully reached by the info days and partner search forums. Info days were extremely effective, which is evident from the high attendance rates, the positive feedback from participants and the high number of submitted project proposals. Regarding the direct beneficiaries, the most effective communication activities were the information days and the training workshops. The general public was successfully reached by publications on the official programme website, the websites of the Managing authority (MA) and the National authority (NA), and on social media. The programme website was especially effective, as it was the most popular source of information concerning the Programme. A very successful tool was the presentation of best practices at events such as European Cooperation Day, exhibitions and fairs. The combination of online communication tools and mainstream media was also very productive in terms of increasing awareness of the Programme.

In contrast, the use of printed promotional materials turned out to be not as effective as expected. On the one hand, the printed information was up-to-date for quite a short time. Beneficiaries, potential beneficiaries and general public predominantly used online information about the Programme. On the other hand, the global marketing trend is emphasizing on environmentally friendly activities and this is following also the rapid change in consumers' preferences. To engage more participants the Communication strategy 2021-2027 will pay attention to local adaptation of messages, to use of more developed online support tools for sharing of knowledge and information and transfer the part of the communication activities like trainings, video clips and official events online. MA, NA and JS will implement on the programme level all necessary measures for transition to green and digital communication and support the beneficiaries to implement these measures on a project level.

PROGRAMME PRIORITIES

The main joint challenge of the CBC region for 2021-2027 is to leave the group of lagging regions and take on more advanced course of development while still facing persistent risk of poverty and income inequalities issues urged by negative demographic change, underdeveloped CBC regional value chains and entrepreneurship, low technological specialization, unattractive and uncompetitive business setting. The programme has the following priorities:

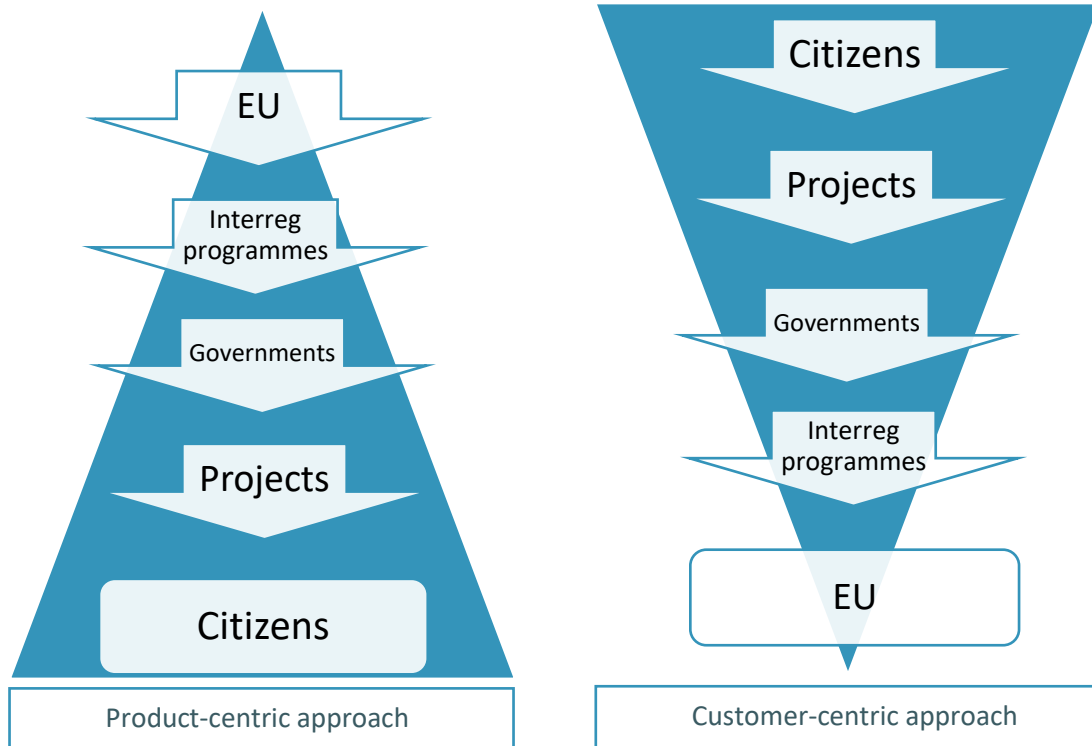

For the kick-off and the ribbon cutting ceremony of the strategic project (the construction of new border-crossing checkpoint) the beneficiaries will organise public events with the participation of wide range of stakeholders, including the representatives of the European Commission. Additional on-the-spot checks of officials and media will be carried out. The construction works – both of the BCCP and the road, will be captured in HQ drone videos and published in social media on regular basis.

STRATEGIC PILLARS

From top-down to bottom-up

Many people consider decision-making in the EU according to the top-down approach – the so called “product-centric” understanding of the Interreg structure: a pyramid, headed by the EU and trickling down to citizens. In order to achieve effective communication and problem-solving, a shift to the customer-centric approach is needed. The Bulgaria- North Macedonia Programme 2021-27 has the bottom-up vision, with citizens at the top and the EU at the bottom.

Coherency

In order to reverse the current vague perception of what Interreg programmes do, we need to keep a cohesive communication aimed at creating a common image of all Interreg programmes for all audiences. Our ultimate goal is for everyone to perceive Interreg as close as programmes do.

Change-oriented

The Bulgaria- North Macedonia Programme 2021-2027 has a strong focus on a symbiosis of the communication and capitalisation functions to enhance the shared thematic results and ensure a greater impact at mainstream and European policy-level. Capitalisation will provide the necessary oriented contents towards the showcase of best practices and potential policy-change through coordination means, to be promoted throughout the communication channels of the Programme, stakeholders and projects. The capitalisation concept doesn't translate always in actual documented policy-change, but into several stages of achieving it on targeted levels. The communication strategy will support the capitalisation process, in all stages of the process.

This pillar will be channelled mainly through:

- The strategic processes to manage the programme architecture;
- The communication strategies templates for projects;
- The communication campaigns of capitalisation results;
- The synergies created by the working groups.

Greener

The new EU Green Deal, launched by the European Commission in 2019, introduced the principles of circular economy and a low-carbon-based activity, on the Programme thematic-level and on all management activities. Based on that, the communication strategy of the Bulgaria-North Macedonia programme includes these principles in all its activities aiming to set the framework and the indicators for the programme and projects communication strategies, thus creating a greener overall impact of the programme communication activities, for example:

- Introducing carbon offsetting in events, physical or digital;
- applying green procurement principles in all tender procedures to cover communication needs;
- Green procurement to include local production, green certified providers (venues, printing);
- mobilising the projects to follow the example of the Programme in their communication strategies;

More Interactive

Based on lessons learnt, there is the need for a more interactive communication between the programme and its target audiences including the different groups of stakeholders. On that note, we are focused on creating more, better and simplified mechanisms and tools for interaction, on all phases and initiatives of the programme, by setting permanent channels of communication.

Our main aim is to know at all times the perceptions of the target audiences as regards the information offered, the tools provided, the activities launched, in order to promote the necessary reworkings, whenever possible, thus introducing basis for flexibility.

Furthermore, we are engaged in fostering a greater peer-to-peer interaction and synergies among the beneficiaries and project partners themselves and among all stakeholder networks, engaged in the programme.

Interactive communication will be introduced through the following:

- Creating a permanent forum tool for partner search and share of project ideas;
- Creating virtual sessions to clarify questions, during the launch of calls;
- Creating virtual meetings with to foster national information providing on a one-to-one basis;
- Collecting information and satisfaction rates on different phases of the calls for proposals, on programme and national level, to fully understand the perception of the process by the potential beneficiaries;
- Establishing transversal working groups to test concepts, collecting feedback for new planned actions and tools and to get feedback during actions' debriefings;
- Fostering open days to easy the public access to projects locations and activities;
- To boost the use of social media channels for one-to-one Q&A sessions, regarding the promotion of calls.

IMAGE-MAKING

One important part of the communication strategy is how the Programme wants to be perceived especially by its audience public. On this matter, our drivers are:

- Catalyser for cooperation: The communication strategy will foster accordingly, through its channels and mechanisms, synergies among the different levels and actors of the programme architecture, ultimately to leave a long-standing legacy of cooperation among partners of different nations in the territories that benefit from the funded-operations.
- A trusted partner: a trustful relation between the Programme and the project shall be enhanced, by means of a two-way communication. As the Programme implementation unfolds, it is a critical factor of success to foster a permanent bidirectional communication down the value-chain set between the Programme and its potential and actual beneficiaries and stakeholders, by taking into account inputs and their feedback, as well as providing necessary expertise, experience and assistance to boost the efficiency and effectiveness of a broad programme and project implementation. In this sense, the Programme and Managing Authority reputation are paramount to provide facilitation among such diversity of public and private actors.

- Policy-driver: The ultimate operational goal for the programme implementation is to value the thematic project achievements as inputs for new policies or policy updates on regional development. As a result, it is important to make clear for all involved stakeholders, the Programme's role to foster spill over effects of project results to public mainstream authorities and participating countries.

STRATEGIC OBJECTIVES

The significance of effective communication has become widely recognized by all the actors managing EU funded programmes.
